

FASHION AGAINST FASCISM

The far-right is here to claim space on our streets, and power in our institutions.

We oppose the far right because we know that the history of fashion in the UK is one of migration - from the Huguenots, to Jewish and Bangladeshi communities, to generations of students, factory workers and designers from all round the world - migration built a global fashion capital. To this day migrant workers in Leicester in precarious work build fast fashion empires with their labour.

We also oppose the far right because we know that the real problem in this country is corporations and billionaires, not migrants.

Join our bloc on the Together Alliance on 28 March and let's march together, as fashion workers, campaigners, students, activists - a community against the far right.

WHO ARE WE

The Rana Plaza Solidarity Collective came together to mark the injustice of the Rana Plaza factory collapse that killed 1,138 people in Bangladesh in 2013. We keep organising together because we know that injustice is built into the fabric of our world, that power is still held at the top by too few, and the price for greed, extraction and extreme wealth is paid by those who have the least.

We celebrate diversity, creativity and community. We welcome migration while standing against the imperialism that we see in the garment industry – centuries of plunder of global south countries for the convenience and enrichment of the west.
